

Amanda Trainor is the Special Projects Coordinator at Brooklyn Cooperative Federal Credit Union, where she leads member engagement, community partnerships, and public-facing education to expand access to financial services. She has spent the past decade working in New York City's broader solidarity economy supporting grassroots organizing and communications. Amanda is a proud board member of the East New York Community Land Trust, which fights to bring housing and land under community control. She holds a Master's in Urban Studies with a concentration in Economic Democracy from the CUNY School of Labor and Urban Studies.
