

Elissa Bard has devoted her career to community development finance and strengthening the foundation of communities through the stewardship of capital. Elissa is Vice President in the Urban Investment Group (“UIG”) with Goldman Sachs Asset Management and leads the firm’s investments in CDFIs across the country. Established in 2001, UIG has committed over $24 billion through impact real estate projects and affordable housing and through lending facilities supporting CDFIs, small businesses, education, healthcare, and green infrastructure.

Elissa has a CDFI practitioner background and before joining Goldman Sachs served the Chief Operating Officer for Community Capital New York and Director of Multifamily Lending at the Housing Development Fund. Elissa began her career as a CRA examiner at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and spent close to a decade in the Community Lending and Investment group at Wells Fargo Bank in San Francisco. Born in Washington, D.C. Elissa resides in New York City and received an undergraduate degree in international relations from Tufts University and a master’s degree from Columbia University’s School of International and Public Affairs. Elissa serves on the board of the Bronx Children’s Museum.
