Marybeth brings more than 20 years of appropriations and legislative experience to her work with clients facing rapidly evolving federal funding and policy landscapes. For over a decade, Marybeth has served as a professional staffer for the US House Committee on Appropriations, during which time she oversaw $24 billion in annual appropriations covering the Treasury Department, Internal Revenue Service, Office of Personnel Management, Small Business Administration, US Postal Service, and more than a dozen independent government agencies, as well as the federal Judiciary.

This wide-ranging experience across all three branches of government — including her work with more than 30 federal agencies — has given her an unparalleled, comprehensive understanding of the strategies and tactics necessary to help clients achieve desired outcomes. Drawing on her proven ability to forge strategic partnerships with a broad range of stakeholders, Marybeth strengthens public-private collaboration by working with agencies, congressional offices, nonprofits, and trade associations to guide effective funding and policy outcomes.

In addition to her extensive background as a private- and public-sector budget and financial analyst, Marybeth combines deep knowledge of legislative negotiation and decision-making processes with a finely tuned ability to help clients focus on strategies and initiatives most vital to their interests. She has particular experience in emerging issues such as IT modernization, cybersecurity, artificial intelligence, and other efficiency efforts. Throughout her career, she has championed increased funding for innovation and results-focused initiatives while maintaining a commitment to fiscal accountability.
